Mayor Glasmann Testifies He Is Not The Editor But Business Manager Of Standard.

Ogden, Utah, Oct. 21 .- As the result of serious injuries inflicted Tuesday evening, William Barendregt, the 10year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Barendregt, died at the Ogden General hospital last evening.

The little boy's death is a most distressing affair. Tuesday evening he came home from school and went out to the barnyard to do his evening chores. He placed a rope around the cow's horns and led her to water. Thoughtlessly, while holding the cow he wrapped the rope around his waist, the animal became frightened at something near the water and started to run away. The boy tried to loosen the rope from around his waist, but was unable to do so. He screamed for help, and this seemed to cause the cow to run faster. A gentleman tried to catch the rope, but was unable until the cow had dragged the boy almost a block through the sagebrush and fences. When the boy was at last loosened from his terrible plight he was picked up and carried to the home, 1122 Twenty-fourth street. Dr. Perkins was summoend and had him removed to the hospital. He had received two severe scale wounds everal tooles long, and scalp wounds several inches long, and juries were too serious, and he died at the hour mentioned. at the hour mentioned.

The parents are grief stricken over the sad affair. The family came to Ogden about two years ago from Holland. The funeral services will be held tomorrow at the Fourth ward meeting-

Another evidence of the progressiveness of the school comes this time from the lecture committee. It is in the shape of a 16-page prospectus of the lecture course. It is very valuable in that it contains, not only the names of the lecturers and calendar, but facts the lecturers and calendar, but facts the public should know relative to the lecture course. It gives also a great number of eastern testimonials, ably supplemented by what fellow townsmen think of the course.

the audience give her a grand salute but the five hundred singers, in themselves an inspiring background, rose enmasse to greet her, a mark of dis-tinction which evidently pleased her to the utmost. Eames is a regal, queenly, and a beautiful woman, as queenly, and a beautiful woman, as well as a rare artist. Her voice is a brilliant soprano; its strength and quality well distributed through all the registers, low, middle, and high. It is clear, true, and bell like—perhaps colder than that of either Nordica or Melba, but as true and clear as either. She rendered the difficult aria from "Aide" in noble fashion, and as an encore gave the "Spring Song" by encore gave the "Spring Song" by Henschel, its birdlike features being charmingly done. Two other numbers, "The Elegy" by Massenet, and the Bach song "Mein glaubiges Herz," both given with cello acompaniment, were exquisite gems, and another recall had to be yielded. The grand number of the night, Eames' appearance with the choir in the familiar "Inflammatus" from Stabat Mater, was a magnificent achievement on the year of the society. achievement on the part of the soloist, choir, and the accompanist. She sang in this with beautiful effect throughout, and the highest praise that could be rendered her is that the single respect in which she fell short of Nordica was in the tremendous volume of tone that he latter poured forth on the high "c the latter poured forth on the high "C" which is sustained several times against the entire strength of the accompariments. But for the fact that this was the closing number, and that it was somewhat late when the program ended, it would surely have been tumultuously encored.
